

READ ALL ABOUT IT Online

Looking for a good book?
Take your search online.

Do you need to find engaging reading material for your struggling reader? An online reading site may be a good resource. Such sites offer descriptions of the latest books, author interviews, and reviews—often written by kids or teens. For a good example, check out The Stacks on Scholastic.com.

What to do:

1. Log in to The Stacks in the Kids section of Scholastic.com.
2. Does your child love mystery and suspense? What about teen fiction? Or how about graphic novels? Then check out “Books & Authors.” This section features books from many different genres. Your child can find book summaries, as well as activities that connect to her favorite book.
3. Is there a book your child wants to tell others about? He can post a comment on the message board, and read what others have written.
4. Next, invite your child to brush up on her writing skills. The Ink SploT 26 Blog features plenty of fun writing prompts. Kids and teens can write captions for photos, build on sentences and stories started by other readers, and submit questions for famous authors to answer.
5. Finally, in The Stacks, your child can find video interviews with favorite authors, and even actors who are portraying her favorite literary characters on film.

Go to: www.scholastic.com/kids/stacks/books

